Research program:

Made in Italy products - especially high-end products in major industrial sectors - are internationally recognized for the quality of their design and technical features. In order to maintain competitiveness in the face of the continuing evolution of the social, industrial and economic contexts, at both national and global scale, Italy has to undergo a transformation that will enable it to address crucial issues from the perspective of social, economic and environmental sustainability. The overall vision is to enable the design, production, distribution, and possible recovery of Made in Italy products and services through internal and supply chain processes that are self-sufficient, self-regenerating, reliable, safe, and energy-efficient from a circular economy perspective.

In this context, the research program aims to contribute to the definition of a new competitive paradigm through the conceptualization, design and testing of new archetypes, methods, solutions and business models from a restorative and regenerative perspective, as well as consistent with a resilient and circular supply chain model and based on the use of technology.

Specifically, the research will focus on defining and testing new frameworks, models, methods, coordination mechanisms, collaborative management and service-oriented approaches and tools – supported by technological solutions for the resilience, sustainability, and structural circularity of supply chains – in order to implement scalable, customer- and resource-centered, sustainable, and accountable business models.

SELECTION CODE N. 4

Positions: no. 1

Group of academic recruitment field: 13/A – Economics;

Academic recruitment field: 13/A2 – Economic Policy;

Academic discipline: SECS-P/02 – Economic Policy;

In recent years, a series of disruptive and unexpected shocks, such as the Great Recession in 2008, the COVID emergency in 2020 and more recently the energy crisis following the war in Ukraine, have profoundly influenced not only the organization and functioning of markets, but also the lives of families, resulting in new forms of poverty and social inequality (caused, for example, by the unequal availability of technologies and skills for distance learning or remote work). The effects of these shocks, combined with ongoing structural changes (such as population ageing, technological progress and robotization, climate change), require new measures to tackle inequalities, increase households' resilience to adverse shocks while fostering sustainable growth. In this context, the research program focuses on the determinants and consequences of economic and social inequalities within and between households, with particular attention to the role of education and labour market conditions. In particular, the aim of the research is to understand how educational choices and automation influence skill mismatch, paying attention to family choices in terms of investment in human capital and to the phenomena of job polarization in the labor market. The research also includes a focus on gender differences, especially on the role of the household in influencing gender differences in educational choices, and how these affect gender differences in the labor market. The research will require the integration of different data sources (administrative and survey datasets) and the application of statistical-econometric methodologies for the identification of causal effects.

In the context of the "Centro Nazionale per la Mobilità Sostenibile", funded by the Italian

In the context of the "Centro Nazionale per la Mobilità Sostenibile", funded by the Italian National Recovery and Resilience Plan (PNRR), a research topic concerns air mobility and, in particular, electric aircrafts. The aim of the research activity is to assess (also through simulations, scenario and cost-benefit analysis) the environmental, economic and social impact of this new kind of mobility. For example, from the environmental perspective a reduction in acoustic pollution and in the emissions of atmospheric pollutants is expected, with a consequent improvement in the human well-being and health conditions. Another aspect of interest concerns the integration of environmental impacts in the assessment of the air mobility system efficiency.

Before the impact evaluation analyses, it is necessary to estimate the demand for passengers and freight, taking into account the structure and the connectivity of the network of airports. Statistics and econometrics methods will be used, together with stated preference methods.

It will be required an in-depth knowledge of statistical and econometrics models for spatio-temporal data and for the analysis of complex networks and longitudinal data. Particular attention will be also given to the recent developments of the machine learning and deep learning algorithms. Given the high volume and variety of the data that will be available, a proved ability to manage "big data" and to implement advanced and computational efficient methods for statistical models is requested. So treated innovative textile materials will not only be related to fashion and design but they can be proposed in booming sectors for which technical performance and durability of effect prevail (for sports or medical applications, for automotive, up to textiles used in construction or agriculture or more specific ones for aerospace composites) demonstrating flexibility and potential not yet fully explored to date.

Hybrid organic-inorganic compositions for conferring stimuli-responsive properties (for developing wearable sensors), as well as flame-retardant, water-repellent, and antibacterial characteristics, will be investigated, among others, with studies on the durability and non-toxicity of coatings. Furthermore, in the framework of green chemistry, special attention will be paid to the possibility of removing applied coatings, recovering post-consumer materials, and creating high-value-added outputs. The research activities are consistent with (a) the European Green Deal, the Circular Economy Action Plan (CEAP), and the New Industrial Strategy for Europe, which, in particular, have identified textiles as a priority sector; (b) the framework for Research and Innovation 2021-2027 (Horizon Europe: Destination 1 of Cluster 4); (c) the national research program (PNR 2021-2027), with the specialization area of the applied research system "Design, creativity and made-in-Italy" a distinctive national asset with high development potential; (d) the national technology cluster program "Mint Made-in-Italy," approved by the MIUR among the areas of the national strategy for smart specialization (SNSI).
