Program: English language skills and competences as described in the Common European Framework – Level C1+

- SPEAKING: In social and travel contexts, users at this level are beyond the stage of having any problems in dealing with many of the routine situations of everyday life, such as those which arise in shops, restaurants, banks and hotels. In the workplace, they can argue a point persuasively, and ask questions which go outside their own immediate area of responsibility or expertise. They can contribute effectively to meetings and seminars within their own area of work, and give a presentation or demonstration. Users at this level can use the telephone for most business purposes.
- WRITING: In social and travel contexts, users at this level can write personal letters, only encountering difficulties where very complex issues arise, and they can produce some of the more formal types of letters, such as emails, responding to a complaint, enquiry, application and CV. In the workplace, they can deal with routine requests for goods and services, but may need help to deal with a situation which demands tact or delicacy.

- READING: In social and travel contexts, users at this level can understand specialised magazine and newspaper articles, although complex plots, arguments and humour may present difficulties. In the workplace, they can understand instructions, articles and reports, market research, statistics, etc. as long as, in most of these cases, the topic area is within the learner's own field, and no particularly complex concepts and arguments or unusual vocabulary are involved.
- LISTENING: In social and travel contexts, Level C1+ users can cope with everyday life up to the level of being able to understand details of accommodation arrangements such as tenancy agreements. In the workplace they can understand most of what takes place in meetings and seminars within their own area of work. They can follow arguments unless they are very complex or abstract.
